FICTITIOUS Los Angeles Times Article

Written June 2012

Today, Glendale Adventist Medical Center was recognized as the best hospital in all Los Angeles County by receiving 35,000 votes from local members of the Los Angeles community. One eager community member, Ima R. Happy stated “I just can’t believe what’s happened at my hospital! I went there for a broken hip and had to have surgery. Those nurses were on me like an Italian suit. They made me feel so comfortable, kept me informed of my condition and I even went home a day earlier than my doctor predicted. I barely remember being in pain at all because they constantly kept it in check.” She went on to say that “the housekeepers were the sweetest folks and I slept like a baby at night!”

Nursing Director, Punnoose Varghese, declared that “In recent months our leadership team really pulled together to be more consistent with the practices we know work best! Our staff have found that patients are happier, they use the call lights less often and they even are healing faster!”

V

Hospital management informed the press that they had embarked on what they called a “Performance at a Higher Level “journey where all the leaders committed to using best practices in leadership and hospital systems. By aligning their goals, working diligently to implement their actions, and holding each other accountable, they saw substantial improvement in several areas. Most notably, the key driver experiences went from the bottom quartile (25th percent or below) to the 90th percentile since June 2012. Additionally, with all the buzz in the community about the noticeable improvements, the number of patients and doctors using the hospital went up significantly, therefore helping the hospital attract and retain the best staff and have healthy financial performance.

CFO, Kelly Turner was quoted as saying, “Yes, we are very pleased, not only are we serving our community and mission, but in the tumult of healthcare reform, it is great to see how much our patients and doctors appreciate the care here. And it has helped stabilize us in financially tough times.”

Studer Group, a partner in this Performance at a Higher Level journey has invited leaders from GAMC to their annual showcase of best performers called “What’s Right in Healthcare?” This year in Paris, France, the GAMC team will explain how they used evidence-based leadership principles to turn around these important publicly reported measures of quality and service.

One new and important publicly reported measure is hospital mortality. In May 2012 this rate was 1.18. The most recent quarter showed this at .70. The new Vice President of Medical Affairs and Quality Arby Nahapetian explained it like this. “Our physicians really came together to communicate better with each other and the clinical staff. Our development of team oriented care and peer review has made great strides. Each department has committed to embrace the best known medical practices and hold each other accountable. Coincidentally, the satisfaction of the doctors has improved as well.”

The local mayor congratulated GAMC saying, “We always knew we had the best hospital in Los Angeles in GAMC, I just wonder why it took so long for everyone else to notice too!”

- I asked the entire management team to help set a date in time that THEY believed this article could be published:
